

Disparities in Access to Healthcare for Teens

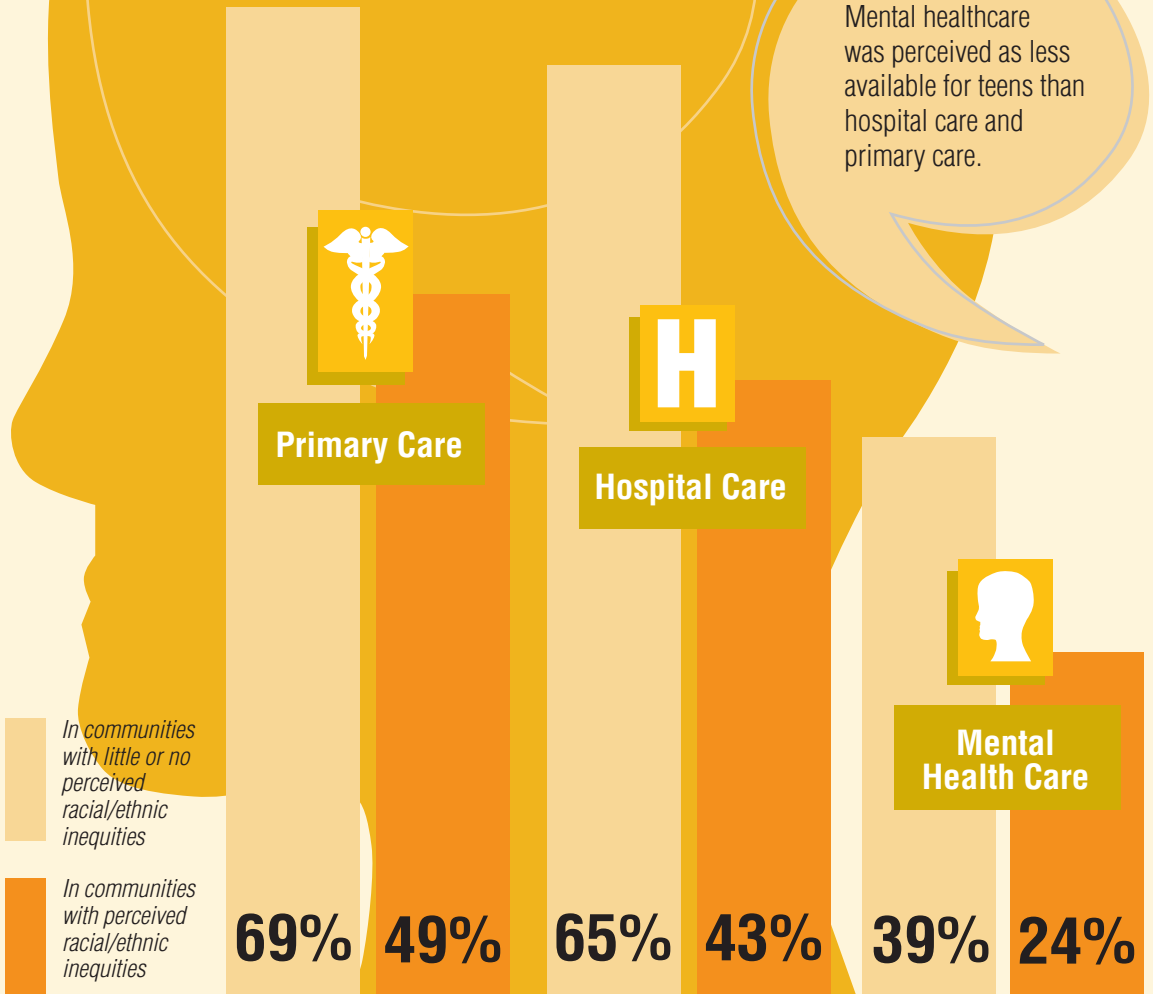

How available are different types of healthcare for teens in the US?

In communities with perceived racial/ethnic inequities, healthcare was less available than in communities without inequities.

Healthcare in communities

Proportion of adults who perceive lots of availability for teens:

Mental healthcare was perceived as less available for teens than hospital care and primary care.

In communities with little or no perceived racial/ethnic inequities

In communities with perceived racial/ethnic inequities

Data Source: Data are based on responses from the National Voices Project (NVP) Survey, fielded in August 2012. The NVP is conducted in partnership with GfK, an international survey research organization that maintains KnowledgePanel® and the KnowledgePanel Latino®, nationally representative web-enabled panels of adult members of households across the United States. Survey respondents included 2,311 adults from 48 states and D.C. that work or volunteer with children. Respondents have jobs or volunteer in ways that affect education, healthcare, economic opportunities, or community and civic engagement for children.

Contact: NationalVoicesProject.org and nationalvoicesproject@med.umich.edu

Funding for the National Voices Project is provided by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation as part of the America Healing initiative.